Vive la DIFFERENCE
Look beyond France's big-name bottles and uncork some hidden gems, says Helen McGinn

When it comes to the world's most famous wine-producing countries, France can surely claim podium position. It has centuries of winemaking history, with the names of the regions among the most recognisable and revered in the wine world - think Champagne and Chablis, Bordeaux and Burgundy and beyond.

French wine still sets benchmarks and trends today. Just look at the pale pink roses of Provence; they've become so popular in recent years that Spain's Rioja region - where 'rosado' wines are traditionally darker - actually changed its wine regulations to accommodate a lighter shade of pink.

But the real beauty of French wine doesn't lie in history or fashion. It's the sheer variety on offer with wines of all colours and styles being made in hundreds of appellations covering the country from top to bottom. What's more, if you look away from the 'big name' regions and most famous grapes, it's stuffed with amazing heroes and hidden gems. And this is often where you'll find really good wine at accessible value.

Champagne, for example, is a byword for luxury, but the cunny fizz-lover looks out for crémant, the name for French sparkling wine made in eight recognised regions outside of Champagne. It's produced in the same way, from similar grapes, but is half the price. Similarly, look out for a bottle of French sauvignon blanc - while New Zealand put this grape on the world map, the under-the-radar region of the Loire is its real spiritual home.

Ready to discover some winning French wines? On your marks...

Helen McGinn's book, The Knackered Mother's Wine Guide, is out now.

Waitrose Loved & Found Carignan Blanc, France (€8.99/75cl)
A grape once nearly lost, Carignan Blanc is a rare Mediterranean variety. Just a handful of vineyards still grow it, most of which are in the Languedoc-Roussillon region in southern France. This crisp, dry white is lightly floral with a citrus twist. Perfect with herby salads.

Cave de Beblenheim Pinot Gris Reserve, France (€11.99/75cl)
You don't always find the name of the grape variety on show with French wine labels. Not so in Alsace, where this aromatic Pinot Gris is grown in vineyards around the village of Beblenheim. Ripe with white peach and a touch of spice - try it with Thai curries.

No.1 Sauternes Château Suduiraut, France (€17.99/37.5cl)
Nowhere else in the world makes wine quite like Sauternes. In this small spot in Bordeaux, early morning autumn mists blanket the vines, encouraging the growth of a fungus called 'noble rot' on the grapes. This pierces the skins and concentrates the juice inside. Blissful with fruit puddings.

Cave de Lugny Crémant de Bourgogne Blanc de Blancs NV, France (€15.99/75cl)
Perhaps the closest to Champagne in style, this Crémant is made from the Chardonnay grape by a leading co-operative winery in the Mâconnais region in southern Burgundy. Stylish bubbles.

Dominique Piron Beaujolais Villages, France (€13.99/75cl)
The lesser-known Gamay is a juicy French grape worth discovering. The Piron family has been making wine in Beaujolais for 14 generations and this violet-scented one is packed with black cherry and raspberry fruits. Open a bottle with charcuterie.

Château Capendu La Cornelle Corbières, France (€8.99/75cl)
Produced by Jean-Claude Mas, a pioneer of the revival of the Languedoc region and its wines, this brilliant red is a blend of Carignan, Grenache and Syrah. It's bold and spicy with bramble fruit flavours. Great with barbecued meats.

Guigal Côtes du Rhône Rosé, France (€13.49/75cl)
The Rhône is famous for its robust reds, but the region can produce a rosé with real oomph too. Often a little darker in colour and bolder in flavour than pale Provence varieties, this one's no exception, with juicy strawberry fruit flavours. Serve with spicy salmon kebabs.
