WHAT'S YOUR FAMILY VACATION PERSONALITY?

Take this quiz to find out how you rate.
BY SHANNON CASTER / ILLUSTRATION BY

Family vacations come in all shapes and sizes, from a trip to Grandma's to an overnight campout to a week in Hawaii. Take our vacation-personality quiz and choose the answers most like you. Then follow the path to see how you tend to influence the fun factor when traveling with your family.

1. Your parents announce your summer family vacation plans: a week away with just the family. You're

a. excited to go. You love family vacations!
b. fine with it. It's something your family does every year.
c. disappointed. You can't believe you have to spend a whole week apart from your friends.

2. Your mother asks you to help pack for vacation, even though you were about to leave for a friend's house. You

a. call your friend and tell her you'll be over in about an hour.
b. agree to do it later tonight after you get back from your friend's house.

3. A week before the trip your parents ask what kind of activities you'd like to do while on vacation. You

a. grab a pen and begin making your list.
b. mention one or two things and then go about your day.
c. reply, "Whatever. I don't really care what we do."

4. Your parents are rushing around trying to find a missing suitcase. You

a. take a few minutes to help search.
b. mention where you thought you saw it last year.

5. While on vacation, you learn that you have to get up really early one morning for an activity. You

a. set your alarm—it's just this once.
b. protest—vacations are meant for sleeping in.

6. The one activity you asked to do on vacation is canceled because of bad weather. You

a. suggest something else. There's so much you want to do.
b. sigh but agree to let the parents plan next.

7. At the last minute, your parents add another side trip to the vacation. It will make your vacation three days longer. You

a. ask what you can do there. You might as well have fun.
b. slump in your chair and ask if it will ever end.

8. Rocky Road Trip
The thought of another vacation bores you, but some positive vibes can turn any vacation into a memorable one. Get involved by discussing some exciting activities. Talking about what you like to do can give your family vacation a much-needed boost.

9. Par for the Passage
While you don't mind the annual family vacation, you also like a little time for yourself. You even welcome a few days to sleep in! Giving your opinion when asked can help you balance your desire for personal time with your family's desire to be together.

10. Vive La Vacation
You're willing to try new things, let loose and enjoy the time away from home. Your eagerness to lend a helping hand and go with the flow makes vacations with you a breeze.
