Gin is as much part of British culture as a cup of tea. But much like tea, gin is an imported idea, adopted and renationalised by the Brits to such an extent that it is now considered England's national spirit. So at home in England is gin that the highest standard of gin production even carries the name of the country's capital city: 'London Dry Gin'.

This honorary citizenship is the finest gins does not a gin carrying this name in London. The capital city saw gin such an extent that one of the first Beebeater's gin was left in the capital so for
