HE FIRST TIME STOCKTON spoke of the little Fallows was under a baobab tree, waiting on a lion. “After this, if you’re still looking for something, your pulse going, give Mr. Charn a call. Edwina in Maine. He’ll show you the little door.” Stockton sipped whiskey and laughed softly. “Bring your checkbook.”

The baobab was old, nearly the size of a cottage, and had dry and the whole western face of the trunk was cored out. Hemingway had built the blind right into the ruin of the tree itself: a khaki tent disguised by fans of tamarind. Inside were cots and a refrigerator with
