Create your Own Walking Tour!

Uncover hidden stories about your community

BY SELAH ULMER / ILLUSTRATIONS BY VICKY SCOTT

Have you ever imagined what it would be like to be an explorer? To go on a treasure hunt, to discover hidden historical stories and to share your findings with your friends and family? This spring, become an explorer in your own neighborhood. You can do this by designing a walking tour.

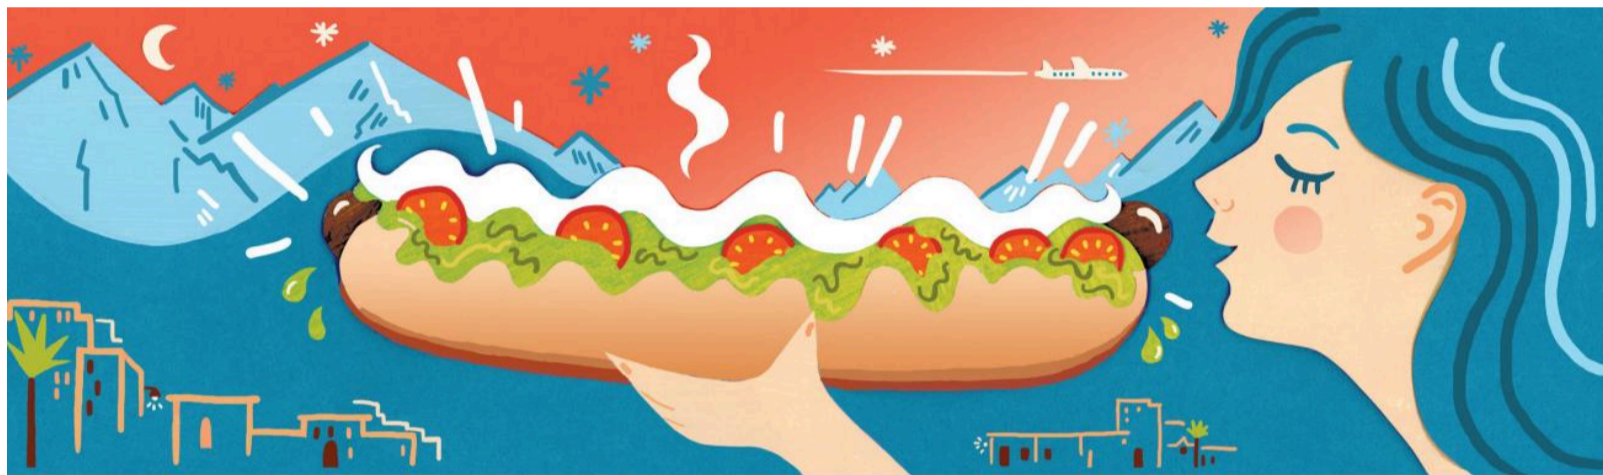

A walking tour is exactly what it sounds like: a tour that you plan yourself and lead on foot. The details that go into creating it include planning the route, discovering and deciding on the information to include—historical stories or natural curiosities—and getting the word out to your friends and family.

Darrin Crow is a professional storyteller and tour guide. He has more than 30 years of experience and started giving tours when he was 16 years old. Here are his tips for giving spectacular tours: >

Eating completos in Santiago

WORDS LAURA HADLAND
ILLUSTRATION VICKY SCOTT

I once went to Chile by accident. It was spring 2009 and Latin America was engulfed by the Swine Flu pandemic. I found myself at ground zero — Mexico City Airport — stranded. Announcements of shop, hotel and restaurant closures streamed through on social media. “Don’t come, everything is closed!” The friend I was meant to visit urged me to turn back, but it was too late. I spent seventeen interminable hours sat on the airport floor, wearing my first N95 mask.

Then, a lifeline. The last flight out of Mexico was heading to Santiago de Chile. I could take it, or wait out Swine Flu in lockdown town. It was a no-brainer.

I arrived in a country I knew nothing about. My first job was to secure funds. The chap at the money exchange booth was quite surprised when I asked him “¿Qué moneda utilizas?” — “What currency do you use?” The exchange rate of around 850 Chilean pesos to the Pound made me feel nervous.

I needed tens of thousands of pesos for one night’s bed and board. I hoped I hadn’t made a mistake with my limited command of Spanish and accidentally bankrupted myself.

It was the wee small hours when lodgings had been secured, the passport was ready and I could finally grab something to eat. Luckily Santiago lives for late night partying — most locals don’t head out until around topm — so it was easy to score some food.

In a dimly lit dive bar, walls painted black, I recognised very few of the words on the menu. Feeling hungry the “Completo” sounded like a reasonable punt for a full meal.

Unknowingly, I had stumbled upon a Chilean classic, born in Santiago in the 1920s. It is a take on the American hot dog, swapping out the mustard and ketchup for something more to the Latin taste. Its creator, Eduardo Bahamondes added diced tomato, mashed avocado, sauerkraut, onion and parsley to his sausage in a bun. He named it ‘Completo’ simply because he’d put everything on it.

The Completo has become a ubiquitous street food in Chile and limitless new fillings have been invented. One of the most traditional forms (and the one I tried first), is the Italiano. Filled with avocado, tomato and mayonnaise, it shares the colours of the Italian flag.

The sauces and toppings are not mere seasoning. They are added in serious — epic — quantity. When my first Completo arrived, I still didn’t really know what it was. The sausage, and indeed most of the bread, was hidden by an inch thick layer of mayo and a similar quantity of mashed avocado. I can honestly say it was a frightening amount of mayonnaise, and I am not easily intimidated by condiments.

But once you’ve tried one, you get the urge to experiment with more. The sandwich-loving Chileans have so embraced the Completo that May 24th is celebrated as National Completo Day. Raise a toast with your a lo pobre, featuring a fried egg, onions and cheese on the dog, or dive into the Alemán (German) topped with sauerkraut, tomato and mayo. The flavours will make you glad to be on holiday by mistake. 🍷
